Ohio's native plants have had about 8,000 to 10,000 years to get it right! Since the last glacial event, the plants that thrive in Ohio's climate and soils have coexisted with all of our insects, diseases and for just a short time...all of us. They are true survivors, well suited to the rigors of our local landscapes. Species native to Ohio are able to provide the very best habitat for local wildlife and require less fertilizer, less water and less effort in controlling pests. (Translation: less worry and maintenance!)
